Yesterday there was printed a lengthy article saying "Blinkey" Morgan, the Ravenna murderer, had been identified as John Carruthers, of Mt. Pleasant. The wood cut of "Blinkey" in possession of Marshal Burns, somewhat resembles Carruthers, but those acquainted with the latter are not positive that he is the man. The rumor has awakened much interest among Mt. Pleasant residents, and one gentleman from that place has written to Mr. Maxwell, of Columbus, who is well acquainted with Carruthers, asking him to go to the penitentiary and see acquainted with Carretners, asking him to go to the penitentiary and see "Blinkey" and see if he is Carretners. Considerable interest is felt, and people from the rural districts are anxiously awaiting Mr. Maxwell's reply.

his feet were wet and cold—chilled to the bone. He had a fine time, he said, and was shortly ready for bed, where he was "tucked in" by his gentle mother, and was soon asleep. In an hour he waked cross and crying. "Mamma," he said, "mosquitoes is eating my feet up." That was just it. He was feeling for the first time the pangs of chilblains. Jack Frost had nipped his toes. We grown people don't appreciate how children suffer. If a hun-dred mosquitoes went to work at once on appreciate how children suffer. If a hundred mosquitoes went to work at once on a man's bare foot, he would know what that child suffered. A burning, itching swelling that becomes a torture, and leaves the feet so tender they will hardly bear weight. It is not because we do not sympathize, but because we do not sympathize, but because we do not seek out and find what will give prompt and permanent relief that they are condemned to this racking torture, without sleep, night after night. Now, in proof a case may be cited to show that people are sometimes so cripled by frost-bites as to be helpless and thrown out of work in consequence. Miss Kate Shulta, Mt. Washington, Baltimore county, Md., writes, under date of October 22, 1834; "After being told by two prominent physicians that they could not give me any cure for frost-bite, I tried St. Jacobs Oil, and it proved a blessing. Every winter I was prevented from carning my living by frost-bite, but since using the Oil I have not been troubled with it." It is in its nature the very thing; acting as a gentle counter-irritant, it draws out the fover and fire produced by the frost, reduces the swelling, heals the soreness, and there are no tender feet afterward. Now, for mercy's sake, when you see a little one tortured in this way, remember this. The feet becoming once tender and sensitive are subject svery winter to a return of this plague.
